

LEADERSHIP & MANAGEMENT

QNET presents:

Performance Conversations: Feedback, Defensiveness, Abrasive Behaviour

Two days: November 20 & December 12 – 8:15 am to 4:15 pm at QNET, 660-175 Hargrave Street, Winnipeg

Part One: Effective Performance Feedback

For many, delivering effective feedback is the most challenging aspect of managing people. These discussions can potentially impact on your relationship with the employee, the person's performance and the team dynamic / output.

Managers, leaders and supervisors often struggle with employees who have attendance issues, behaviours that negatively impact the team, or have not met expectations.

This practical, highly interactive course explores ways to provide feedback that supports a positive, performance driven environment where these conversations are expected and received well.

At the end of Part One, participants will be able to:

- Initiate 4 feedback conversations that result in behavior change and maintain the employee relationship;
- Understand and empathize with struggling employees and still hold them to workplace expectations;
- Utilize a toolkit of options for difficult conversations and be prepared to respond to a variety of reactions;
- Know how to adjust conversations when speaking to the direct, blunt employee as well as the indirect sensitive employee (adding art to the science).

Facilitator: Janet P. Schmidt M.Ed. mediates, coaches and trains leaders in the workplace. She has developed over 20 days of training specifically for the workplace, has taught at several Universities in Canada and worked internationally on a long-term assignment and on a consulting basis.
