Emotional Intelligence

Thursday, February 7, 2019 – 8:15 a.m. to 4:15 p.m.

Location: QNET – Suite 660, 175 Hargrave Street, Winnipeg

Research shows that Emotional Intelligence (EI) can be twice as important as IQ and technical skills in determining who will become a top performer. Synonymous with great leadership, EI is best defined as the ability to manage ourselves and relate to others.

Emotionally intelligent people form strong relationships, communicate effectively, are authentic, develop trust, and cope effectively in difficult circumstances. Find out if you have it, why you need it and how to develop it!

This workshop will include:

- What is emotional intelligence (EI) and why should I be interested in it?
- The case for self-awareness and self-management: Don't be one of the "smart" people who fail.
- What is the connection to effective leadership?
- Review the 15 skills for success and complete a subjective analysis of your emotional intelligence using the EQ-i 2.0 model.
- Determine how EI can be used for leadership development, personal development, performance management, coaching, building high performing teams, selection, retention and career development.
- Receive the results of the EQ-i 2.0 Inventory. You are not required to share the details of the report in the session.
- Review tools and strategies to enhance your emotional intelligence and develop your career.

The EQ-i 2.0 brings you the most advanced and thoroughly researched measure of emotional intelligence in the assessment industry, yielding more powerful insights than before.
